BNP wins Burnley recount after High Court ruling

FREE & FAIR: BNP supporters outside the Royal Courts of Justice in the Strand in London protesting against the electoral malpractice that has become the hallmark of this current Labour Government.

JOHN Rowe, the British National Party's candidate for Rosegrove with Lowerhouse ward in Burnley has won his High Court battle for a recount of the May 3rd ballot.

Labour's Paul Reynolds had been declared the winner on the drawing of lots after ballot papers, which had been stamped rejected and declared 'spoilt', were controversially included back in the vote.

After the first count John Rowe was two votes ahead of Labour. A recount was called and the winning margin was reduced to one.

The Returning Officer Steve Rumbelow, was then put under immense pressure by Labour activists to allow an already discounted vote to be added to their tally which made the votes equal.

On September 12th Judge Mr Justice Irwin, ordered a "thorough recount" of all 4,605 votes.

John Rowe was delighted with the verdict.

"I think it was a very fair judgment in what is an unprecedented case. This one vote for the Labour Party should never have been counted," he told BBC Television News.

BNP chairman Nick Griffin, said that what had taken place at the count was typical of the bullying and intimidation that Labour politicians and activists believe they can use in elections and situations where the BNP is involved.

"During the count spoilt ballot papers were rejected and this was accepted at the time by all concerned. It was only when the difference was down to one vote, that the Returning Officer was pressurised by the Labour contingent to change his mind and this shouldn't have happened."

"BRITISH JOBS FOR BRITISH WORKERS"

... but this time the call comes from a politician who really means it!

NICK GRIFFIN: Leader of the British National Party.

GORDON Brown's contemptible effort to woo back former Labour voters from the BNP with phoney patriotic statements, drew a swift and stinging response from BNP chairman Nick Griffin.

Brown mentioned the words 'British' and 'Britain' 81 times in his speech to the Labour conference, and even called for "British jobs for British workers".

"By offshoring British jobs to Asia and importing migrant labour, this Government has stabbed the British worker in the back. And it has been aided and abetted by our trade unions who seem more interested in opposing the BNP than saving the jobs of their members," Nick Griffin told Freedom.

"British jobs for British workers can only be a reality if Britain leaves the European Union and turns its back on the global economy. We can't compete with the huge cheap labour economies of China and India. Our standard of living is too high, our population is too low, our island is too small and our transport links too difficult.

"The British National Party believes the economic future of our country should be based on self-sufficiency - providing ourselves with the goods that our people need.

"Such a system can only work if every consumer has an I'm backing Britain approach when spending their hard-earned wages which will ensure that Britain's farmers, Britain's manufacturers and British based service providers only benefit from the money that has been earned in Britain."

At the General Election you will have the chance to start the process of winning back our country. Voting for the British National Party is the only way to keep British jobs for British workers.

SUPPORT: There's a good turnout of local people to back Mark Walker.

Parents & former pupils show their support for suspended BNP teacher

PARENTS, former pupils, Civil Liberty campaigners and members of the trade union Solidarity gathered outside the gates of Sunnydale Community College on Monday 3rd September in a show of support for teacher Mark Walker.

Mark, who has taught in Sunnydale for the past twelve years, was suspended back in March after allegations of misuse of school equipment although headteacher Sue Boyd, has refused to identify the reasons for her actions. Supporters of the popular teacher believe that his suspension is politically motivated because Mark is a member of the British National Party and stood as a candidate for the BNP at the local council elections.

Patrick Harrington, the general secretary of the Solidarity union, said:

"I genuinely believe his involvement with the British National Party, including standing in a council election, has influenced the action against him. 'We are here to encourage the school to resolve this issue. We want what is best for Mark and the pupils; for him to be back in the job that he is very good at.' Amongst those showing support was former pupil Sarah Brown, 20, who told the Northern Echo:

"He was the best teacher I had at Sunnydale. You could always ask him for help with work or other problems. 'We had no idea about his personal life or views so I think, unless it affects his pupils, he should be allowed back.'"

Mother-of-four Diane Tweddle, of Middridge, was also very supportive. She said: "He has taught all my children and they respect him. They say he is one of the best and want him back."

Even a teacher came out from out voice her support for Mark.

"In our citizenship lessons we tell children to respect people's beliefs yet this isn't happening in this case," she said.

Patrick Harrington and Mark Walker had an afternoon meeting with Sue Boyd to try to resolve the issue but it was all to no avail. The head teacher said she was referring the case to the school governors with a recommendation that Mark Walker be sacked for gross misconduct.

Patrick Harrington was disappointed with the outcome and questioned the motives behind her decision. "She permitted a meeting organised by opponents of the BNP to take place on the school premises to call for Mark Walker to be sacked.

"She allowed false allegations against Mark Walker to be aired without coming forward to set the record straight.

"She claimed it was 'utterly false' to suggest that Mark was being picked on because of his political affiliations. Nevertheless she had questioned Mark about his candidacy for the British National Party in the last local government election and at this meeting she had a copy of Mark's BNP election address in the file on the desk in front of her," he said.

SOLIDARITY: Mark Walker thanks his well-wishers for their support.

London Mayor candidate calls for Met chiefs to come clean over carnival crime

SENIOR officers within the Metropolitan Police were so desperate to give the impression that the Notting Hill Carnival was a 'safe and peaceful' celebration of Britain's multi-cultural society that they doctored the crime figures for the event.

But thankfully a number of policemen who were actually on duty over the Bank Holiday alerted Freedom to the cover-up when arrests they had made at the carnival were excluded from the final total.

"Apparently this year the crime statistics were based on offences committed only on the roads on which the carnival travelled. We arrested two youths who had grabbed a lady's handbag in a side street a few yards away from where the procession was passing. Later I heard that this arrest wasn't to be included," one officer reported.

And it wasn't just muggings and street crime at the carnival that went unreported. A mounted police charge against over a hundred drunken 'revellers' in a street at the Paddington end of Westbourne Grove was also excluded from reports because it wasn't on the carnival route.

Richard Barnbrook, the British National Party's candidate for London

CARNIVAL CRIME: Richard Barnbrook wants the full figures to be released.

Mayor, condemned the cover-up.

"This isn't just an issue about ambitious politically correct senior policemen fixing the statistics to please their New Labour paymasters.

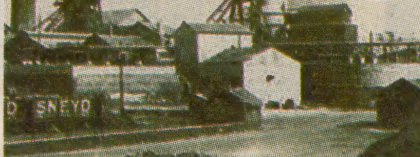

"What worries me is that it will give the wrong impression to the public that the Notting Hill Carnival is now a safer event to attend, when this is not the case. The vast majority of crimes committed at the carnival have always been on the periphery of the event and not on the very public route of the procession.

"I shall be pressing for the full crime figures over the whole area of the carnival for the Saturday, Sunday and Monday of the August Bank Holiday to be released," he said.

NOTTING HILL: Most crime is committed away from the carnival procession.

Memorial for victims of Sneyd Pit disaster

THE British National Party's Stoke City councillors were on hand to meet relatives of miners who died in one of North Staffordshire's worst pit tragedies when a memorial was unveiled in their memory.

The iron wheel and sandstone plinth memorial remembers the victims of the Sneyd Colliery disaster.

On New Year's Day in 1942, fifty-seven men and boys died at Sneyd Colliery on the outskirts of Burslem and Smallthorn. They shouldn't even have been at work but due to the urgent demand for coal, to help the war effort, the manager appealed to the men to work and they wholeheartedly responded.

At 7.50 am, 800 yards below ground, there was a huge explosion in the Seven Feet Banbury Coal Seam in No.4 Pit. Rescue teams brought out four injured miners and three bodies but a further 53 men were trapped at the coalface.

Although rescue work went on for two days, all hope of finding any survivors was gone and it was another week before the final body was recovered. BNP councillor Ellie Walker, met Beryl Royle of Meir Park, whose father, Albert Hansell, led the rescue teams which worked for eight days to recover the bodies.

She told Ellie:

"When we heard the explosion we thought it was a bomb. My father was working nights and was at home.

"There was a knock at the door and he was told there had been an explosion and they needed his help. We didn't see him for two days. I can remember the quietness after it happened, and the sadness of all the relatives."

The British National Party is the only political party that has been actively campaigning for a Miners' Memorial Day to remember those, across the generations, who gave their lives underground digging coal to supply Britain's energy needs.

Righteous anger & political action

THE British National Party believes in telling the truth - even if it's sometimes uncomfortable to hear or even offensive to those who would rather bury their heads in the sand than face up to the problems in our society.

But while we often pass critical comment on the impact of mass immigration, multi-culturalism and even foreign religions on the indigenous people of our lands, we have no animosity towards immigrants, their descendants or the followers of non-native religions.

Nor do we intend to encourage others to feel such animosity, or believe that anything we have to say is likely to 'stir up hatred' against anyone. In fact, we believe that by providing a peaceful and constitutional outlet for the anger and frustration felt by millions of our people over the undemocratic transformation of our country by our political masters, the British National Party actually defuses tensions.

Where there is 'hate' we seek to turn it into righteous anger and political action against the only people who deserve to be hated - the politicians who use our taxes to turn our country into a place where we often feel like strangers in our own land.

DONNA BAILEY: The mother of three wants to help Upper Beeding provide more facilities and organise more events for its young people.

Political bias robs village youngsters of their champion

UPPER Beeding Parish Council could be reported to the Standards Board after it voted against co-opting a candidate just because of her political background.

Donna Bailey stood to be co-opted on to the parish council at a meeting at the beginning of September. She gave a speech outlining what she could offer to the community and emphasised how she had no politics to bring to the parish council. "I have three children and am especially keen to move forward the suggested youth council in the village. "We have a lot of teenagers that have nothing to do because this village does not cater for the young people, which is one of the reasons I believe I have a role to play on the parish council," she told the assembled councillors. Donna is a prolific fundraiser in the village and for Upper Beeding Primary School. She takes part in many village events and was one of the key organisers of the revived bathtub race this year. But that cut little ice with the parish councillors who only wanted to quiz her on why she stood as a British National Party candidate in May. A witness to the proceedings was Avril Gathern from the village who told the West Sussex County Times said: "I have never been to one of the meetings before, and was absolutely appalled as to what went on. "Nobody asked Donna Bailey about the village, what she has done and what she was going to do. "They were just interested in her political background." Chairman David Coldwell, admitted that party politics was probably involved in the decision: "Donna Bailey came up for co-option and she said who she was and what she wanted to do. When the vote was taken it went against her by one vote." A disappointed Donna told Freedom that despite the setback she would continue to serve the best interests of the residents of Upper Beeding. Donna Bridges is standing for the British National Party in the Holbrook West By-Election in Horsham on the 11th October 2007.

the Sedgefield by-election after a complaint by a British National Party official. Copeland (Cumbria) BNP organiser Clive Jefferson, who was a key figure in the BNP's by-election campaign, delivered a ten-page dossier to the Chief Constable of Durham, drawing particular attention to illegal leaflets and leafletting by third parties not involved in the election. The Chief Constable asked Clive what he was looking for from this investigation and he replied: "The British National Party wants nothing more than fair, honest and transparent elections. The integrity of the British electoral process must be beyond doubt, it clearly is not at the moment because of illegal practices endemic in the current system." Detective Sergeant David Hall, from the Economic Crime Unit, is to lead the investigation and he will be focusing on the leaflet "Pure Evil" which was widely distributed just before polling day.

Tony Frankland wins historic Epping Forest by-election victory

by Eddy Butler

THE British National Party celebrated a major triumph on the night of 30th August 2007 when the Party successfully defended Loughton Alderton ward in Epping Forest District Council.

Defending a seat in a by-election in a ward previously won by a BNP candidate is very difficult as our opponents 'know we are coming' and can pull out all the stops to prevent us from winning. In Epping all the other parties worked together against us, choreographing their campaigns to try to draw support away from the BNP. There were also the usual hostile Trade Union and 'Third Party' groups telling people not to vote BNP. One such group, Redbridge and Epping Forest Together was sponsored by the 'Searchlight' organisation which is funded by the Labour Party to organise election campaigns against us. Epping BNP certainly had a mountain to climb and on top of all this, in the background was the knowledge that the British National Party had never in its history successfully defended a council seat in a by-election. Labour wanted Loughton Alderton ward back. It canvassed and put out leaflets which attacked us and claimed that only Labour could beat the BNP. The contents of the Conservative leaflets also attacked us, and their candidate the canvassed and whipped-in their vote, again claiming that only the Tories could defeat us. The Liberal Democrats ran a well-organised campaign with an array of different leaflets attacking the BNP. They carried out at least two canvass sweeps and whipped-in. UKIP put out several different leaflets and canvassed. Their candidate was a high-profile Party employee and a UKIP activists were told they could win this seat from the BNP. The Loughton Residents' Association worked with Redbridge and Epping Forest Together targeting voters disillusioned with the main parties and bizarrely those who were worried about immigration. The poor electors of Loughton Alderton ward must have had more leaflets delivered and had more knocks on their doors than in any recent election in British political history. On polling day it was not uncommon to see people from three different parties whipping-in on the same street! It was that sort of campaign. Well all their efforts came to nothing. BNP candidate Tony Frankland and his team out performed the lot of them with a textbook campaign. For the first time in the history of the British National Party we had held on to a seat in a by-election. Now we are back to having two councillors in Loughton Alderton ward with Tony Frankland lining-up beside our excellent sitting councillor Rodney Law.

BNP website - most popular in politics

THE British National Party has the most visited website of any UK political party, with more hits than all the other parties put together. Hitwise, the online competitive intelligence service, said that more than SEVEN times as many visitors click on to the BNP's site than for the Labour Party. It also has almost three times as many visitors as the much-touted Conservative Party website on which David Cameron has invested heavily to woo floating voters. The study of over eight million internet accounts found that people from the areas in the past regarded as traditional Labour strongholds were most likely to visit the site. Although nearly a quarter of the site's visitors were people who would have been thought of as committed Conservatives having successfully established themselves and their families in comfortable suburban homes. Young and well educated city dwellers were also over-represented amongst visitors to the BNP's homepage and the proportion of the site's visitors that come from the middle classes is also increasing: 59% are from the more affluent ABC1 social groups, and this figure is up from 50% two years ago. BNP web editor Steve Blake, was not surprised by Hitwise's findings. "As well as finding out information about the BNP, the website is also used as an alternative news source. Early release puts the public at risk

by Louise Scott

THE Government's early release scheme, introduced to address the issue of prison overcrowding, has led to more crimes being committed. There have been 56 crimes committed by those who have been released early, and 43 offenders have gone on the run after they did not meet the conditions of the early release scheme.

Over 100 prisoners have been re-called since the scheme began in late June, but so far only 83 of these have been found and returned to prison. Over 700 of those released were in prison for violent crime and over 400 convicted of burglary and robbery.

The release rate is also much higher than the Government intended with predictions for the total to number around 46,000 instead of the 25,000 that the Home Office claimed would benefit from the scheme.

This, coupled with the fact that prison place shortages have resulted in some PRISONERS: Labour is putting their interests before those of the public.

'low risk' criminals now being secretly 'housed' within the community, shows that the Government is more concerned with the rights and comfort of criminals than it is the law-abiding majority of the population.

Schoolchildren out of control in Leicester

THE latest figures published by the educational authorities for Leicester are a shocking indictment of a breakdown of discipline in the county's schools.

■ 4 children aged four were suspended from school for assaulting teachers.

■ 16 children aged just five were suspended for violence against teachers.

■ A five year-old was expelled for sexual misconduct.

■ 2 nine year-olds were excluded for sex offences and a ten year-old for carrying an offensive weapon.

■ 129 under-nines were suspended for assaulting their teachers last year.

■ Other suspensions at junior schools were for smoking, abuse and theft.

365 city pupils between the ages of 11 and 16 were suspended for carrying an offensive weapon and more than a 1000 teenagers suspended for verbally abusing teachers.

The breakdown in discipline uncovered in the schools' report was further borne out by the police figures, which show over 50,000 complaints last year from members of the public with regard to the behaviour of children, with many of the calls relating to underage drinking. The British National Party believes that law and order should be the priority of Government. The groundwork for this must be instilling discipline in our youngsters at the earliest age by educating parents with clear 'code of conduct' guidelines within our schools, along with a return of the 'bobby on the beat' policing of local communities.

NEW: Disruption by primary school children on such a scale has not been seen before.

Daily Mail is 2 years late exposing the 'patients & translators' scandal

AS reported last month, where Freedom and the BNP lead, the other newspapers and political parties eventually follow... but only two years later!

Back in 2005, Freedom reported that immigrant and foreign patients needing treatment in our hospitals were being put at the front of the queue if they couldn't speak English and required the services of a translator. Now in September 2007, the Daily Mail has finally woken up to what is going on, reporting that Britons are left waiting in clinics for hours because patients who need interpreters are being given priority by hospital trusts as it's cheaper than keeping costly translators waiting.

In November 2005, Freedom published a letter from Geoffrey Hawkins of Barking who wrote:

"I was recently at the Chest Hospital in Bonner Street, Bethnal Green to receive treatment and was amazed to see a sign behind the reception desk which said: 'Patients who come with interpreters, will be seen first.'"

"The only conclusion that one can come to is that the health needs of people who can't speak English are being put before those of ordinary Britons. I did question my doctor about this and she said that the policy was to save me money. Apparently, as a taxpayer, I pay for the interpreter service provided for these new arrivals and if they bring their interpreter with them when requiring treatment, 'the bill mounts if they are kept waiting'."

Some 22 months later the Daily Mail finally visited the same hospital and reported: "At one outpatient clinic - the London Chest Hospital, at Bethnal Green in the East End - signs clearly warn visitors: 'Patients needing trust interpreters will be given priority.'"

Treating immigrants and migrant workers costs the NHS more than £62 million a year. Providing translating services in the public sector for immigrants costs £100 million a year. The burden of supporting immigrants and migrant workers is falling on the British taxpayer and to rub salt into the wound the very people who are funding the NHS are being put to the back of the queue.

New threat on Yorkshire's roads

ONE-in-six fatal accidents on Yorkshire's rural roads are caused by migrant workers from Eastern Europe.

The figures only came to light after North Yorkshire County Council started last year to record the birth place of everyone involved in a car crash.

Insurance claims against Polish drivers in particular have tripled in the past two years and drink-driving is to blame in many of the accidents. A council officer emailed Freedom with his take on the findings:

"The majority of Eastern European drivers are men aged between 16 and 24 who speak little English. They pile people into their cars, drive much too fast, get confused at roundabouts and road junctions, can't understand the road signs and more often than not over the drink-drive limit."

DANGER: Young migrant drivers are often over the drink-drive limit.

Lotto cash helps asylum seekers claim benefits

SINCE it began 12 years ago, the National Lottery has handed out over £75 million in funding to groups looking after the interests of asylum seekers.

This year already more than £2.1 million in lottery cash has been sent to asylum organisations with the latest award of £402,200 being given to the North of England Refugee Service to help asylum seekers complete paperwork so they can apply for subsidised housing and benefits.

Taxpayers fork out for gypsy buses

TWO free buses are being run by Basildon Council to take children from an illegal gypsy site to school even though the journey is less than a mile.

It is costing taxpayers £30,000 a year to ferry children from the Dale Farm site to Crays Hill Primary School.

The council usually only provides transport for pupils who live over 3 miles from a school, but it says the service is needed to boost attendances. Crays Hill has 62 pupils on its roll, with all but two from the gypsy camp, and attendances have been so low that staff sometimes outnumber the children.

Migrant crime lost in translation

THAMES Valley police force is advertising for Polish speakers to answer the telephone after a steady rise in calls from immigrants from Poland who cannot speak English.

The force's police inquiry centres take an average of 20,000 calls a week with 240 telephonists able to converse in 41 different languages.

The area covered by the force has seen a huge influx of migrant workers with Slough Council alone reporting 9,000 recent arrivals from Poland.

In London, the Metropolitan police force is facing a similar problem and is advertising for Romanian speakers. Translation services are needed to cope with spiralling crime rates amongst immigrants from Romania.

Zealots stifle debate

RESIDENTS in Suffolk who voice concerns about the numbers of asylum seekers and immigrants settling in the county could be targeted by race relations zealots in order to stifle any debate.

The Ipswich and Suffolk Council for Racial Equality wants employers, the police, health and social service to play their part in stopping discussion.

Jane Basham, director of ISCRE, said: "Politically incorrect things are being said on asylum, immigration and migrant labour, that damages our black and minority ethnic communities."

Cumbria pips Warwickshire for honours on super Thursday

SUPER THURSDAY: Susan Mather polled 13.8% in Wigan West while Bill Pugh, seen here with wife Eileen, at the count, picked up 23.4% in Whitehaven.

WHEN you are Britain's fourth political party, it's only natural at every election to set your sights on becoming Britain's third political party.

Well, if the local council election results on 20th September are anything to go by, the British National Party are well on the way to launching a challenge to overtake the Liberal Democrats.

In the six by-elections contested, the BNP beat the Lib-Dems in three and lost only one. In the other two seats, Britain's third political party couldn't even manage to find a candidate.

On this Super Thursday it was Whitehaven in Cumbria that just won the honours from Nuneaton in Warwickshire for the best BNP vote.

ROB PURCELL: Lowest vote on the night but still overtook the Lib-Dems.

Bill Pugh in Abbey ward for Copeland Council gained 23.4% in what was the BNP's first ever election in the borough. He was delighted with the result, telling the assembled press in the early hours of Friday morning:

"We had a figure in mind of about 100, and we have more than doubled that, largely through hard work and canvassing."

"I am glad the local press gave us a fair crack of the whip and were not biased against us. I'd like to thank the Whitehaven News for giving me a chance to have my say in a fair and balanced way."

Alwyn Deacon beat the Tories and Lib-Dems in Abbey Ward for Nuneaton and Bedworth Council, the third excellent British National Party result in the borough this year.

There was just 0.1% difference between the BNP results in Southend and Wigan where both Alisdair Lewis and Susan Mather polled well.

In Worcester, BNP candidate Peter Beechey beat UKIP and the Greens with nearly 12% of the vote in a by-election that snatched all the media attention with Labour taking the seat from the Tories in what is seen as a key marginal.

Even in Birmingham, where there was disappointment that Robert Purcell didn't manage 10%, there was still some satisfaction in over-turning a Lib-Dems superiority of 142 votes from May for 3rd place.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union to restore Britain's freedom. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need, an end to field trials of GM crops and restoring our 200 mile fishing limit.

FAIR PLAY FOR ENGLAND: The setting up of an English Parliament to give England the same right of self-determination within the UK as enjoyed by Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

GENERAL ELECTION

The British National Party made further progress along the road to gaining more political influence within our country with a very good set of local election results on May 3rd 2007. Now it is vital that we build on these gains. With an early General Election on the cards and next May the all-important London Assembly and London Mayor elections, funds are desperately needed to help finance this 'push for power'. Please help us all you can.

Labour keeps unions on board with taxpayers' money

At the TUC Conference last month Gordon Brown thanked the union bosses for their campaigning against the British National Party with a £2.8 million hand-out of taxpayers' money, under the guise of 'Union Modernisation Funding'. This is on top of previous funding amounting to £7 million. Labour now relies on union leaders to organise the distribution of anti-BNP literature during national and local elections in order to bolster its campaign when facing a challenge from the BNP. As well as providing physical help at election time, the unions also help fund the Labour Party giving £9 million in direct donations plus a further £8 million in affiliation fees last year alone. Just to show how grateful Labour is to these union bosses, Gordon Brown uses taxpayer's money to refill the union coffers in what less charitable onlookers might call blatant money laundering.

Cruddas and Balls - Labour's double act ripping off taxpayers

by Clive Wakley

FOR the past 12 months the British National Party has been exposing the scandal of MPs using the Additional Claims and Allowances (ACA) when they don't need it.

The allowance was set up by Parliament to reimburse overnight accommodation costs of MPs whose homes are so far from Westminster that daily commuting is not possible. Such is the generosity of this allowance, currently worth a little under £22,000 per annum, that many MPs have used it to play the lucrative London property market by buying second homes that they have no obvious need for. Many use "their" ACA money to pay the mortgage interest on their second home, as well as the associated utility and council tax bills.

In reality this means that a large number of MPs are abusing this Parliamentary privilege to use taxpayers' money to fund investment in residential property which will at some future date be sold for an enormous profit!

Although the ACA is meant for the use of MPs from constituencies remote from London, other MPs are claiming it as well.

Through a Freedom of Information enquiry, it was revealed that 18 MPs representing constituencies within 20 miles of Westminster are claiming ACA to pay the interest on mortgages for second homes in London - that's nearly 1 in 3 of all outer London MPs!

This roll of shame includes Labour's Dagenham MP Jon Cruddas, who owned one property in his constituency which is 15 miles from Westminster and a second home in Notting Hill which is 12 miles away. He was able to claim over £20,000 a year in ACA from the taxpayer to help pay for whichever of his two properties happens to be his second home.

It's a similar tale concerning Labour's husband and wife team, Alan and Anne Keen MPs, who represent constituencies in West London. According to Anne's website they have a family home in Brentford, a mere 10 miles from Westminster, yet were claiming over £30,000 per annum in ACA payments between them, presumably on overnight accommodation or a second home nearer to Parliament! And if £30,000 per annum seems extortionate - it has been estimated that they have received close to £200,000 from the taxpayer over the last 7 years in ACA payments alone!

Now, thanks to an expose of senior Labour politicians ripping off the taxpayer using ACA by Channel

"Although the ACA is meant for the use of MPs from constituencies remote from London, other MPs are claiming it as well."

4's Dispatches programme, we learn that Cabinet couple Ed Balls and Yvette Cooper, have been accused of exploiting Commons expenses rules to buy a £655,000 home.

The pair have registered their four-bedroom North London house as a 'second home' under parliamentary rules, which entitles them to allowances of up to £44,000 a year to subsidise their £438,000 mortgage.

They also have a property in Yorkshire, which they used to call their second home, but by declaring instead their more expensive London house to be their secondary residence, they can claim more money from taxpayers.

Regardless of how much such dishonest behaviour may disgust ordinary Britons, the disturbing fact is that none of it is illegal. The rules relating to the claiming of the ACA, which benefits MPs so handsomely, haven't been broken - well, how could they, when these rules have been formulated - by the MPs themselves?

JON CRUDDAS: Using ACA to be three miles closer to Parliament.

Police in Bradford finally admit there's a Ramadan crime wave

AFTER six years of silence, police in Bradford have finally been forced to admit that there is been a marked increase in crime during Ramadan.

Each year for the past six years the level of vandalism and unruly behaviour during the Muslim festival has risen but only now are West Yorkshire Police publicly acknowledging that this is the case.

Officers are unhappy that it has taken so long for their superiors to act and have made their concerns known to the British National Party.

"We have had our hands tied by political correctness," one officer explained.

"A media campaign exposing the levels of disturbance would have pushed the authorities into action much sooner but there's been an unholy alliance between senior officers and the media to hush up the crime levels so as not to show young Muslims in an unfavourable light."

But even now West Yorkshire Police are reluctant to appear too heavy handed and have asked the Council for Mosques in Bradford to help by asking young Muslims not to cause problems.

Instead of this softly, softly approach the force should be swamping the troublespots of Manningham, Girdlington and Heaton and arresting all those caught breaking the law.

RAMADAN: Police admit there's more to it than just prayer and fasting.

Police concern over rising migrant crime

POLICE forces across Britain are struggling to cope with the impact immigration is having on crime due to the influx of migrant workers.

Officers in many areas are seeing the profile of their patch changed beyond recognition with people from different countries, speaking more than 90 different languages, arriving in significant numbers.

Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire Julie Spence, said the effect of immigration growth seeps into all areas of policing: foreigners get into difficulties because they are unfamiliar with traffic laws, investigations into crime can involve trips abroad to interview relatives and police have also noticed a growth in prostitution, driven by the influx of large numbers of single men.

She said some immigrants arrive with "different standards" from those in the UK, notably over issues such as knife crime and drink-driving.

Child benefits sent to Poland

THE Labour Government has admitted that more than a million pounds a month in child benefit is going to children who live in Eastern Europe.

The money is being paid out to 14,000 mainly Polish nationals who claim for dependants living back to Poland.

But ministers refuse to divulge the even larger sums in tax credits for children being paid to new migrants from Eastern Europe claiming the total figures are 'unavailable'.

Around 40,000 Eastern European citizens are said to be claiming tax credits this summer which pays £100 a week to a migrant worker with a child or children in another EU country.

So now Trevor Philips wants to re-write British history

TREVOR Philips, the chairman of the new Commission for Equalities and Human Rights wants British history to be amended to emphasise the roles played by other races and religions, like Muslims. The prominent race relations campaigner said that such a strategy was necessary to help instill more community cohesion. Philips told a meeting at the Labour conference: "We may need to revisit our national story - we want to rewrite that story to tell the whole story."

ARMADA: Philips says it was Turks who saved us, not Sir Francis Drake.

Specifically he wants the history of the Spanish Armada in 1588 revised to show that it was the Turks who saved us, not Sir Francis Drake, because they held up the Armada after a request from Elizabeth I.

"Let's rewrite that, so we have an ideal that brings us together so that it can bind us together in stormy times ahead in the next century."

Mr Phillips, the former chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, declined to offer any other examples of parts of British history that should be rewritten.

He then went on to say that he was backing a campaign by the anti-BNP campaigner Billy Bragg, for a new written constitution to define what it means to be British in the 21st century.

Doctoring the news to whitewash Islam

WHEN BBC News reported that Nicholas Roddis, of Reedham Drive in Rotherham, had appeared at the Old Bailey accused of preparing acts of terrorism in his home town in South Yorkshire, they left out one important fact.

It was the same when BBC News reported a hammer attack on a schoolboy by a gang of thugs in Wroughton, but this time it was THREE important facts that they left out.

In the first case BBC News forgot to mention that Nicholas Roddis was a convert to Islam and that along with chemicals for making explosives and bomb-making recipes, he had at his home Islamic extremist propaganda videos of beheadings.

BBC NEWS: Too Islam friendly?

The missing information in the Corporation's coverage of the Wroughton hammer attack was that the schoolboy was White, the gang of thugs were Muslims and the attack was racially motivated.

The BBC should be an impartial news organisation but it is not. It now has a pro-Islam bias so deeply ingrained that it is actively misrepresenting the facts that it reports in order not to show it in an unfavourable light.

LABOUR'S POLICY IN AFGHANISTAN

DEATH POPPY: The biggest opium harvest in history will put more British youngsters like Rachel Whitear (right) at risk. Rachel died following a heroin overdose and was found days later in her bed in Exmouth, Devon.

Sacrificing our soldiers for the heroin industry

THE only achievement of the British Government's policy in Afghanistan has been oversee the biggest harvests of opium the world has ever seen.

In six years, the occupation by our troops has enabled Afghanistan to increase its 'illegal' drugs trade to make up a massive 40% of the country's economy. According to the United Nations, 2006 was the biggest opium harvest in history, smashing the previous record by 60%. This year it will be even bigger.

Today in Afghanistan the simple production of raw opium in small 'factory farms' is a thing of the past. The industry has developed into a manufacturing and value-added industry converting opium into heroin on a huge scale.

Millions of gallons of the chemicals needed for this process are being transported into AFGHANISTAN: The grim reality of today's conflict is that British soldiers are dying for the benefit of the drug barons.

Now Brussels seeks to undermine our Civil Aviation Authority

THE European Union is demanding more control over UK aviation despite its European Aviation Safety Agency (EASA) being described as "an accident waiting to happen" by a Commons Transport Select Committee.

Bureaucrats in Brussels are now seeking to take more powers away from Britain's own Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) in air safety matters after new legislation was passed in the European Parliament.

The European Aviation Safety Agency costs £15 million to run each year and the latest proposals will see it able to flex its muscles and impose fines and penalties on an industry that in Britain, has been successfully and safely regulated up to now by the Civil Aviation Authority. It's another layer of bureaucratic red tape with no real gain in terms of safety, to provide the EASA with a source of revenue to help offset its spiralling running costs.

"It's another layer of European Union red tape with no real gain in terms of safety"

One insider at the Civil Aviation Authority described the European body as "not fit for purpose".

"Since it was set up to bring national aviation authorities under EU control, the EASA has been beset by management problems and the misuse of resources. It is literally dicing with death to give it any more powers when it can't cope with its current responsibilities. The bottom line is that passenger safety is going to be compromised if the CAA has its authority undermined," he said.

Labour removes poll on Mandela statue

SO much for the Government's claim that it wanted to listen to the issues that concerned the British people by setting up its much vaunted ePetitions Project.

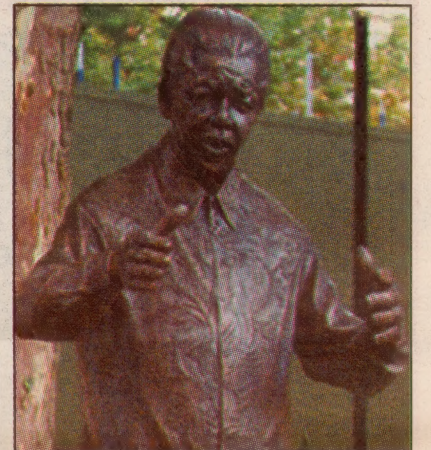

When a petition was posted on the Government's website stating:

"We the undersigned petition the Prime Minister to relocate the Nelson Mandela statue to where it belongs - South Africa. Statues in London should be reserved for British heroes and heroines."

It was immediately removed and the petitioner told:

"We view this as wholly against the spirit of ePetitions in that it is being used to generate division rather than debate. We have therefore taken the rare step of taking the petition down and we will not respond to the issue beyond this email."

"London is an international city and one of the greatest and most diverse cities in the world. The UK Government is proud to have the statue of Nelson Mandela in Parliament square."

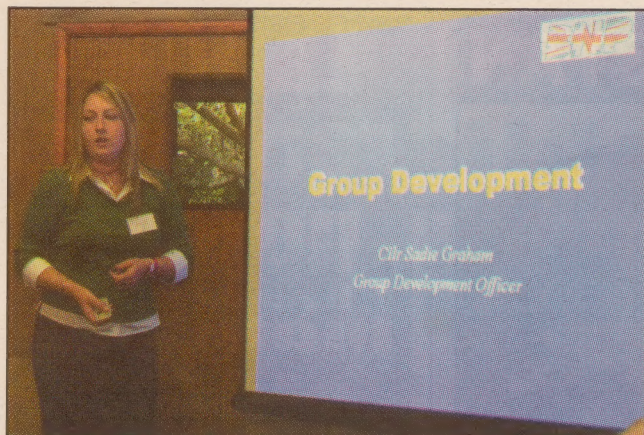

MANDELA: His statue is not a topic the Government wants to discuss.

The fact that Mandela was a self-confessed terrorist who advocated and condoned violence to achieve his political ends, seems to have been conveniently forgotten by those fawning over him in more recent years.

Also ignored is the chaos, crime and corruption that is rife in southern Africa today - all synonymous with the failure of Black majority rule on that troubled continent.

BNP Summer School finally calls its register in Autumn

by Bob Bailey

WITH a full diary for June and July of meetings to attend as councillor and deputy leader of the BNP Group on Barking and Dagenham Council, there was initially little chance of being able to attend the British National Party's Summer School.

But when the event was rescheduled for September because of the wet summer, I was able to pencil in that weekend and book my place with Sadie Graham.

On Friday as I drove out of London towards Nottinghamshire I was wondering what I might get out of the weekend, but on arriving at the secluded campsite location and being greeted by so many familiar and friendly faces, I was reassured that it was going to be worthwhile.

The facilities, both at the campsite and the main arena, were spot on, with new marquees for the seminars, catering tents, and of course the all-important bar.

"A lot of time and effort had obviously gone into preparing the programme of seminars"

On Saturday, after registering and collecting the professionally produced Summer School brochure, delegates were welcomed by BNP Chairman Nick Griffin.

A lot of time and effort had obviously gone into preparing the programme of seminars. Each one was interesting and well presented, with lectures covering different aspects of the political life of the BNP including group development, raising funds, community politics, handling the media and fighting elections.

After an evening address, the BBQ was lit and I took the opportunity to catch up with old friends and make some new ones. The entertainment on stage ranged from an inspiring rendition of 'Wuthering Heights' to traditional folk ballads. Much better than the XFactor I can assure you!

"An enjoyable weekend with political colleagues in a beautiful part of England"

On Sunday following a hearty breakfast, I attended lectures on handling the media (Arthur Kemp), why we are not civic nationalists (Nick Griffin) and nationalist ideology (Steve Blake). It was all informative and shows just how far the British National Party has progressed over the past 12 months. After lunch there was a thought-provoking closing speech by Nick Griffin on the benefits and future possibilities of home schooling. Driving home that evening I reflected on my newly learned skills and knowledge and an enjoyable weekend with friends and political colleagues in a beautiful part of England. I have been asked by the Barking & Dagenham councillors who were unable to attend whether I would recommend it next year. I would definitely say YES.

The Summer School is not something that you attend just once. It improves year on year and if you want to keep abreast on how the Party is developing and progressing then you must be there to hear from and speak with the people at the forefront of our Party.

Regimental blazers and campaign medals win support out on the election trail

CAMPAIGNING for the Warbreck Ward by election saw activists from the Liverpool Branch setting up a stall in Walton to hand out leaflets, sell copies of Freedom and to introduce Peter Stafford as the local candidate.

"It was the first time we have done this and it went very well with plenty of positive feedback from the public," reported Peter Stafford.

"Many people said how glad they were to see us out in the street and one elderly gentleman asked to have his best wishes passed on to Nick Griffin. The number of negative responses we received could be counted on one hand."

Ex-servicemen Steve Greenhalgh, the Liverpool Branch organiser, and Pete Molloy proudly wore their regimental blazers and campaign medals which brought more supportive comments from the public.

This dress code is now favoured practice for Liverpool BNP when out campaigning and ex-service personnel with other groups and branches should do likewise.

BNP voice concerns at 'Mega Mosque' meeting

by Bob Gertner

A MEETING to discuss the building of the 12,000 capacity Mega Mosque in West Ham in east London took place at the beginning of September.

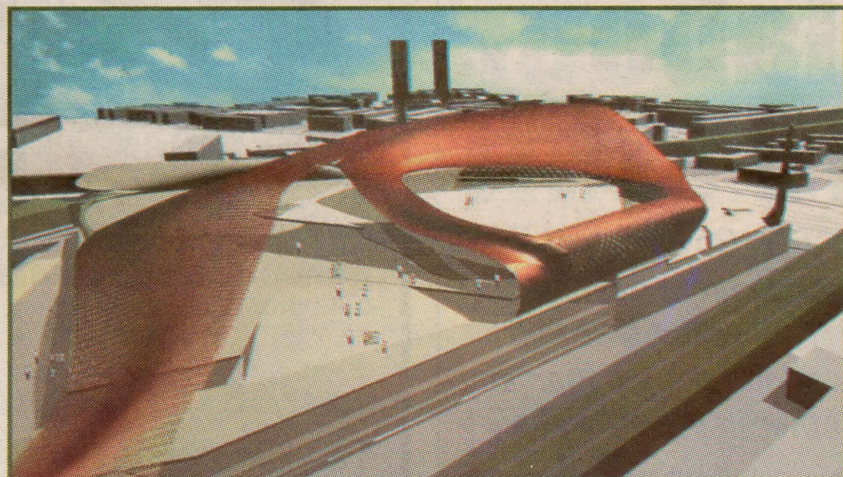

Tablighi Jamaat, a fundamental Islamic sect, propose to build the largest mosque in Europe on a former industrial site adjacent to the 2012 London Olympic site using £100 million donated by Saudi Arabia.

Over 60 people, including BNP Councillor Julian Leppert, gathered at a hall in Stratford, East London, to listen to Abdul Khaliq Mian, a senior Islamic community leader explain the need for the Muslim place of worship which will be able to house a congregation FOUR times the size of any that can be accommodated in Britain's largest Christian building.

No official from Tablighi Jamaat, which advocates strict adherence to Islamic dress codes and lifestyle, attended the meeting as the organisation doesn't believe in discussion with non-believers.

The headquarters of Tablighi Jamaat is in Savile Town in Dewsbury, the home of London bombers Mohammed Sidique Khan and Shehzad Tanweer who also attended a mosque controlled by the organisation.

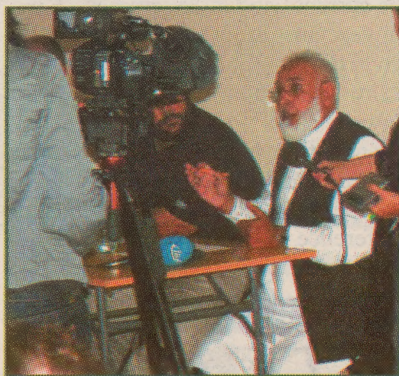

The meeting was packed with local Muslims and Labour Party supporters who thought the building of a gigantic mosque was a wonderful idea and

No one responded to the BNP councillor's points or to other worried residents who said that the go-ahead for the mosque would have enormous ramifications for east London far beyond just dominating the skyline. Only the British National Party is campaigning against the Mega Mosque and an on-line petition organised by the Party has already collected 250,000 signatures from those opposed to the project.

Standing ovation for Nick Griffin's 'stable society'

by Louise Scott

IT WAS standing room only at the September meeting of York BNP to hear a speech from Party chairman Nick Griffin.

His theme was the four essential constituents of a stable society - resources, economy, democracy and community - which he likened to the legs of a table, when one buckles our society is no longer stable.

He summarised the situation today:

"One of our major resources, oil, is decreasing by 8% a year and our reserves from the North Sea are nearly gone. Yet with the emerging economies in China and India needing more and more oil, soon there won't be enough to go around."

"In the 1950s, a man could earn enough to keep his family while his wife brought up the children. Today both parents have to work just to keep out of debt."

"Democracy in Britain has effectively been abolished with many of our laws now being made in Brussels. At Westminster, political correctness means that the Government and Opposition will not discuss the issues that are most important to our people. And finally, and most importantly, our communities are being undermined by mass immigration from Asia, Africa and Eastern Europe."

But Nick Griffin said that the problems we faced were not insurmountable and that a British National Party Government could bring stability back to our society.

NICK GRIFFIN: Democracy in Britain has effectively been abolished.

He said that a combination of renewable energy, clean coal production and nuclear power could solve Britain's resource crisis as the oil runs out.

That a strong home economy could be built, just like in Japan after the war, by being self-sufficient in the produce we need.

Democracy could be restored by tearing up the Treaty of Rome and giving power back to elected representatives and taking it away from big business, while an end to immigration and the deportation of all illegal immigrants would give our communities much more cohesion.

Nick Griffin received a standing ovation for his speech and the collection that followed raised nearly £750.

Immigration responsible for housing crisis

LAST month Building Design, the UK's principal architectural journal, published a letter from Peter Phillips, the British National Party member who polled nearly 20% of the vote in last year's contest to become president of the Royal Institute of British Architects. Peter was pleased his offering was published. He told Freedom: "Perhaps a chink of light is appearing through their PC armour, or perhaps what I said is blindingly obvious and they are aware that most of their readers know it. Inevitably they edited it, although the essence of my message was retained." This is the letter in full:

PETER PHILLIPS: Britain is the 4th most densely populated country.

Dear Sir,

Your journalist Will Hurst suggests that the RIBA (Royal Institute of British Architects) should focus its attention on housing and climate change as key 'issues of the day' (BD 31st August 2007). However there is little point in doing so if it continues to ignore the fundamental cause of the housing crisis - namely mass immigration.

Government statistics indicate that at least 83% of the new housing will be needed for recent immigrants and their descendants. That is why housing is now unaffordable, why there is pressure to reduce space standards and increase densities, to build more high rise flats (which are unsuitable for families) and consume ever more countryside.

The Optimum Population Trust estimates that the UK's population needs to be no more than 30 million to be sustainable, and any fashionable talk about 'sustainability' is little more than hot air if it doesn't address this fundamental fact. At 60 million and rising, we are way above that figure; indeed Britain is the fourth most densely populated country in the world.

But with the indigenous population having a birth rate now down to just 1.4 children per couple, without recent past and present immigration we could have started to see a gentle decline in our population, allowing for the greater number of single households and our longer life expectancy nowadays. There would have been no need for mass house building, in fact we could have seen rising space standards, the replacement of dense estates with lower density housing, and an easing of our overcrowded and increasingly unpleasant environment.

Losing more of our countryside also poses a serious threat for the future. In the early 1950s we were almost self-sufficient in net food production. That has fallen to 63% and continues to fall. At a time when the world will soon face a shortage of energy, the major food producing countries will inevitably divert their surplus production to bio-fuels for their own consumption, indeed that is already happening. Food prices have already risen and will continue to do so, but with decreasing agricultural land in Britain because of housebuilding, we won't be able to make up the deficiency.

So if the RIBA is serious about addressing the housing crisis and 'sustainability' they must face up to the damaging environmental impact that immigration is having on our overcrowded country.

Yours faithfully,
Peter Phillips

BT drives down labour costs with Indian staff

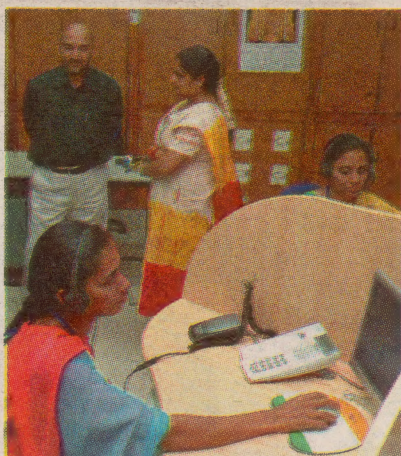

by Whistleblower

I AM currently involved with the training of 2,100 Indian staff at British Telecom in Martlesham near Ipswich, but also using other sites in East Anglia.

These Indian staff are being trained in a variety of technical based jobs and around one quarter of them will take up both full time work AND residence in the UK.

BT intend to use this staff to commence a "driving down of costs" in the UK, which can only be interpreted as "labour costs".

I only have one year left before my employment with BT ends and I have no doubt that an Indian will take over my job. BT needs them to take over such jobs as mine because the future the company has planned out is for Indians to training other Indians, establishing a mobile workforce that will travel to India and Pakistan when needed and provide a much more cost effective workforce than indigenous British staff who are also reluctant to work on the Indian subcontinent. This Labour Government has done more damage to indigenous British working people than any government in recent history. It is now forcing local council departments to decline applications from White British people when an ethnic minority application is received. This has

STRATEGY: Indians training Indians for a cheap and mobile workforce.

"This Government has done more damage to indigenous British working people than any other in recent history" been evident within BT, where some managerial posts have been 'given' to ethnic minority applicants in preference to more qualified and experienced White British applicants. I know of two situations where this has happened, and White British staff have had to carry them and train them on the job.

This is the reality of Britain under the current Labour Government. Now moves are afoot to use workers from Eastern European countries in a similar manner to continue to hold down wages.

Even within local business, Labour councils and Labour MP's are pushing for the employment of migrants in preference to British people.

SALLY WOOD Straight talking!

Food for thought

WATCHING the queues of people outside of Northern Rock and wondering why they seemed reluctant to accept the reassuring platitudes of the politicians that their money was safe, I couldn't help but wonder whether this could be the first stuttering of the Peak Oil Crisis.

We are all told that the causes of Northern Rock's troubles can be traced back to the mis-selling of mortgages in the United States to those with a poor credit history, but surely the gradual hike in interest rates in the US must play a part. Both in the US and here interest rates have been climbing to keep inflation under control, something the West is having to grapple with as the price of oil keeps rising. It is now trading at almost $78 a barrel which is nearly four times what it was in 2002.

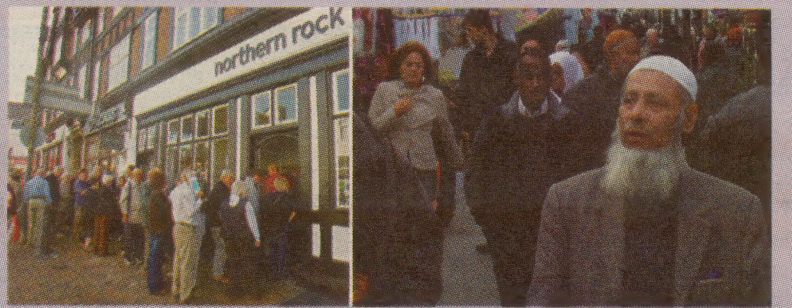

With OPEC seeking to conserve stocks and only sanctioning a modest increase in production of 500,000 barrels per day from November this could lead to oil shortages this winter.

Meanwhile American farmers are switching from producing corn for food into growing it for converting into Ethanol, which is pushing up the price of Tortillas in Mexico. With climate change also playing a part, as the droughts in Australia and Southern Europe, coupled with the disastrous summer in Northern Europe, we find the Italians complaining about the price of pasta, and a loaf of Hovis rising by 8p.

With a population of 60 million and the ability to feed only 30 million, Britain is particularly vulnerable to world wide food shortages. What would happen if after a disastrous harvest here the rest of the world turned round and said it had no surplus food to spare?

As the government continues to flood the country with immigrants for potential electoral fodder and to maintain a buoyant housing market, it seems unperturbed that we could in the future be competing with these immigrants for resources.

No doubt the traitors at Westminster, backed by a media campaign, would call on the indigenous folk of these islands to make sacrifices and be prepared to see our own children go without so that there is enough food to feed all these additional immigrant mouths.

QUEUING: Today it's for money, tomorrow it might be for food.

Time to reclaim our pride

WHEN Yasmin Alibhai Brown appeared on Any Questions she said how disturbed she was that so many people were preferring today to call themselves English rather than British.

Had her family chosen Scotland rather than England as their adopted country, I don't believe she would have dared to suggest that the Scots should cease to think of themselves as Scottish to the audience. She would have been booed from the stage and quite right too; but as for the English . . . well they are just meant to take such comments on the chin. The English are supposed to think that it is perfectly natural to be ashamed of one's nationality because they are constantly told that they are more aggressive and dangerous than the people of other nations so cannot be trusted to proclaim their nationality.

We have heard recently of the disturbing case of two Asian men jailed for grooming young White girls for sex. Why is it one might ask, are our young girls prepared to sink so low as to indulge in such practises.

I believe it is to do with low self esteem and lack of self respect. This is not surprising when they are forced through an education system where they learn nothing of their own history but are only taught in any depth of the slave trade and the holocaust. They know nothing of their forebears and the long proud march through history that led to the English today but everything there is to know about Nelson Mandela and Mahatma Ghandi.

It comes as no surprise therefore that at the age of twelve when our young girls should be holding their heads high and thinking of themselves as young princesses they are instead made to feel so debased that they are prepared to sell their bodies for a few Ecstasy tablets.

ROLE MODELS: Boudicca, better known as Boadicea, was a queen of the Brythonic Celtic Icenii people of Norfolk in Eastern Britain. Labour still plundering Third World for nurses

ONE in every five nurses trained in Zimbabwe is recruited to work in Britain despite rules banning hospitals from poaching staff from the world's poorest countries.

The World Health Organisation estimates that Zimbabwe now has fewer than 9,000 nurses left - just one for every 1,400 people, compared with one for every 156 in the UK.

FREEDOM: Warning not heeded.

Last year the Home Office granted work permits to 1,610 Zimbabwean nurses, more than the number actually being trained there each year and leaving the health service there close to collapse. Back in October 2005 Freedom, on its front page, called for the Government to stop plundering the Third World for doctors and nurses and start training more of our own but once again, our message wasn't heeded.

Typical of Labour to find Red Arrows 'embarrassing'

by Louise Scott

THE world-famous Red Arrows have been banned from appearing at the 2012 London Olympics because they are deemed to be "much too British".

The Government is also worried that the Arrows' military background might be "offensive" to some of the countries taking part in the Games.

The display team has performed at more than 4000 events worldwide, but the Department of Culture, Media and Sport say that the spectacular fly-past might be seen as 'militaristically British' and smack of a legacy from the old Commonwealth.

The Red Arrows pilots were said to be "bitterly disappointed", as they had hoped to put on a special display for the Games, something which had never been seen before. Being dropped from a British-based event just for being "too British" is an insult to the pilots and the British people - the Arrows are seen by many as a symbol of British skill and technology.

The Red Arrows have been excellent ambassadors for British trade, as they display their British-built Hawk aircraft all over the world.

They performed a fly-past in 2005 when the winning Olympic bid was announced, but now they are being discarded by the Labour Government who see their performance as 'embarrassing'. Isn't that just typical of Gordon Brown and his cronies, doing down our home grown talent yet full of praise for anything and anyone from outside Britain.

Labour plays gay card

LABOUR'S new Single Equality Bill forces clergy to conduct gay weddings and makes church schools promote gay lifestyles in lessons.

Church charities are now barred from saying grace before meals or displaying crucifixes.

The bill also prohibits Christians from expressing views that oppose homosexual conduct or challenge people to live lives consistent with the teaching of the Church.

Deceit & Doublespeak

GORDON BROWN's speech at the Labour Party conference in Bournemouth was a masterpiece in deceit and doublespeak showing his utter contempt for the British people.

In his address, he mentioned 'British' and 'Britain' no less than 81 times and against backdrop of the colours of the Union Jack, even declared "British jobs for British workers", apparently endorsing a policy of the British National Party. Coming from the Prime Minister whose government has encouraged the offshoring of British jobs to Eastern Europe and Asia and flooded this country with migrant workers specifically to take jobs from British workers, it was a bizarre statement to make.

Helpfully, Peter Mandelson, Britain's European Union commissioner, was able to clear up any confusion when he was interviewed the following day by Sarah Montague on BBC Radio 4's Today programme.

He said that in his speech Gordon Brown was just reaching out to those voters who felt increasingly left out and ignored by New Labour's move to the centre ground and needed reassuring. Presumably he was talking about the hundreds of thousands of voters who had deserted Labour for the BNP.

Thankfully the BBC interviewer wanted him to say something a little more specific.

"Does he mean, when he says British jobs for British workers, that in the future there will be no more jobs for Polish plumbers?" she asked.

"Of course not," replied Mandelson. "As a member of the European Union, Britain has a duty to allow workers from other member states to seek employment in our country." So you can't be clearer than that.

Gordon Brown's patriotic conversion is for election purposes only. It is also classic 'doublespeak' straight from George Orwell's 1984 - saying one thing and meaning another.

He appears to be trying to manipulate voters just like Big Brother did. "War is Peace", "Freedom is Slavery", "a migrant workforce is British jobs for British workers".

In 1984, doublespeak is an abridged version of English whose eventual adoption, the Party hopes, will limit anyone's ability to think or talk in a way that opposes Big Brother and that is the route New Labour are going down.

The Brown Government doesn't want anyone to be able to express an 'inappropriate' ideal or thought, so they are seeking to alter the vocabulary through consistent mis-use so that it no longer expresses the intended meaning.

It's just another attempt to stem the growth of the British National Party, but like the violence and intimidation that has gone before, it is doomed to failure.

Each and every day more and more people are turning to the BNP and there is nothing that the likes of Gordon Brown and the Labour Party can do about it.

Mockery of asylum

THE Government's desire to appease Britain's Muslim minority reached an all time low with its request to the US to release 'Britons' held at Guantanamo Bay. According to media reports, all the detainees there had connections to Islamic terrorist groups but were granted indefinite leave to remain in Britain by the Government.

Since the Labour Party came to power it has appeased terrorism. First the agreement in Ulster that allowed the IRA to enter government without declaring a ceasefire, and now by allowing Islamic terrorists to remain here. Labour has made a mockery of the original concept of political asylum that of providing a safe haven for people at risk in their home country. Britain is now vulnerable to further terrorism through this appeasement and open door immigration policy.

John Quigley, Hammersmith.

Meaningless equality

SO, at last, the trade unions are spaying lip service to a labour market crisis that's been brewing for a generation.

"Gordon Brown must act before employers turn workers into casual labourers," one union has warned. But as we know New Labour is in the pocket of big business and has no intention of standing in the way of global capitalist greed.

As the gap between rich and poor grows, the rhetoric of the old parties weakly bleating about "equality of opportunity", becomes more and more meaningless - especially if you happen to be 'hideously white'.

Rory Allason, London.

BNP for Black Cabbies

I WOULD like to inform your readers of the situation that has been imposed on London's Black Cab trade by Mayor Ken Livingstone.

All cabbies still have to do The Knowledge, which for most of us means three years hard work at a cost of £5,000 of our own money. But if you are Black or Asian, the London Development Agency, together with the Public Carriage Office, will pay for your training.

It's Livingstone's attempt to take jobs away from what he calls "the White Male Mafia".

No wonder the majority of London's Black cab drivers will be voting BNP in the London Assembly and Mayoral elections next year.

RJ, Dagenham.

It's the wrong strategy

MERSEYSIDE Police Authority has just delivered its booklet 'Your Policing Plan 2007/08'.

The authority has listed its four priorities for the next twelve months. Alongside the commendable policing targets of tackling anti-social behaviour, reducing criminal damage and helping repeat victims of domestic violence is the rather dubious goal of employing more black and ethnic minority staff.

The reason given for this preferential recruitment "is to reflect the diverse population of the local community". This means an incompetent person from an ethnic minority will get a job before a more competent person who just happens to be White.

It's a completely wrong strategy to follow. Jobs should go to the best applicants and not anyone whose main qualification is that they don't originate from this country.

Pete Molloy, Liverpool.

In praise of nationalism

THE solution to many of the world's problems and conflicts is nationalism.

What we need is not a United Nations that worsens the global situation with measures such as the quota refugees' programme, but a league of nations the purpose of which is to protect the national integrity of individual countries.

As we see almost anywhere in the world, the only logical solution to ethnic conflicts is to divide the warring factions into separate nations. This has been the only solution in the former Yugoslavia and it would ease the situation in Iraq if the various sects were divided into independent states. The Kurds and the Basques, for example, have a clear right to and should be allowed to attain nation status.

The politicians who have been in power here at home have failed to protect our own national integrity. The result has been a demoralised chaotic society riddled with conflict; and the situation can only worsen.

Here in Britain, the only political party that offers the hope of restoring our nationhood and securing our future is the British National Party.

Philip Smeeton, email.

Don't turn the clock back

THERE has been much talk of the potential formation of a new political party in Ulster.

Disillusioned members of the DUP and Ulster Unionists are flirting with the idea of forming a party that opposes sitting in Government with Sinn Fein. As a matter of principal, this seems to be a somewhat honourable suggestion because IRA/Sinn Fein has won concession after concession from Blair and his Labour cronies, through the threat of violence.

As a former British soldier I can see what many find offensive about Sinn Fein, but still one has to ask, what new ideas will be brought to the table?

The new political party will not share governance with Sinn Fein - end of story. This stance will put the clock back to a political model last seen in Ulster 40 years ago which led to death disaster and misery.

Those Irish nationalists who live in Northern Ireland have a right to be democratically represented by whomever they choose, provided it is not under the cloak of violence.

This for the large part is Sinn Fein. It is just not feasible to deny anyone this right in a democratic society and it is for this reason alone that the backward thinking 'New Party' will never amount to anything other than a relic of the past.

As members of the British National Party we are only too aware of what it means to have our democratic rights inhibited.

Kieran Dinsmore, ulster@bnp.org.uk

Most worthy of respect

WHEN a young woman in Aberdeen pursued and slapped a man who had done £400 worth of damage to her mother's car, she was fined £500 because in malice she referred to the assailant's ethnicity.

Apparently persons of different racial make-up to the host population must be treated with the utmost respect even if they do choose to damage our property for no reason.

Maybe her proper recourse should have been to follow the assailant and on catching up with him enquire if he had hurt his foot in the execution of the attack. In the likely event that he answered in the affirmative, she should have apologised profusely for the discomfort he was experiencing and offered to drive him home.

It seems as though that whilst all are worthy of respect, some are more worthy than others.

Exclusive to British National Party members

An interview with Barking & Dagenham councillor Bob Bailey

How did you come to join the BNP?

I SERVED in the Royal Marines Commandos for fourteen years and my tours of duty took me to many of the world's trouble spots. I was unhappy that both Conservative and Labour governments were quite willing to commit troops to these countries with little thought for the wishes of the local people and their aspirations to self determination. It was so hypocritical to talk about defending democracy in far off lands whilst giving away our powers to the European Union. Back on civvy street the first thing I did was join the BNP.

Were you initially an active member?

YES, very much so. I wanted to do as much as I could and became the organiser in my home town of Scunthorpe. I was the first BNP candidate to stand in North Lincolnshire and gained 10% of the vote. This was a real success for the group as it showed that people wanted to vote for a credible alternative to the old discredited parties.

How did you become a councillor?

AS we didn't fight Scunthorpe at the 2005 General Election, I spent the whole campaign in East London helping Richard Barnbrook and Lawrence Rustem achieve their ground breaking results in Barking and Dagenham. The potential for the BNP in the borough was evident so I decided to move there and campaign hard for the next round of local elections. We achieved the near-impossible on that fantastic night in May 2006, 12 councillors elected, and it seemed to me that the winds of change were finally blowing in favour of the British National Party.

What is it like being a councillor?

WELL as the dust began to settle the real battle of proving ourselves to be a credible opposition began. The anti-BNP thugs stirred up by the Labour Party soon petered away and our councillors were able to settle down to their work in a logical and methodical manner. The BNP group's victories so far are too numerous to mention but amongst them stands our success of highlighting the housing plight facing local people. Attending council meetings and taking every opportunity to speak for disenfranchised local people ensures the BNP group remains high profile and keeps the ruling Labour Party on its toes.

What have been your duties?

OF course my main priority has been dealing with the concerns raised by my constituents in Alibon ward, but I have also been involved in activities on behalf of the BNP group as a whole. We held an anniversary celebration to say thank you again to those who helped our councillors get elected. We have delivered leaflets to highlight what the BNP group is doing on behalf of the people of Barking and Dagenham. We also organised the Barking and Dagenham St George's celebrations. In addition to all this we have held protests in support of an introduction of Sarah's Law which has raised the BNP's profile along with our regular paper sales and fund raising events in the borough.

BOB BAILEY:
Barking offers a beacon of hope to other BNP units.

What is planned for the future?

BARKING and Dagenham BNP hope to be the first BNP group running their local council and offer a beacon of hope to other BNP units by proving that council representation is only an election away. With all the talk of a General Election and the London Assembly and Mayoral elections in May, the BNP in Barking and Dagenham will be seeking to consolidate our position and to help to sink deep seated roots for the BNP in other areas of London.

BNP contests three seats in Rossendale

THE British National Party fought three council by-elections in Rossendale on September 13th, stretching the local Party structure to its limits.

As expected the best result came in Irwell Ward where BNP candidate Kevin Bryan for the third election running improving his vote and maintained his push to win the seat. He is now less than 100 votes from taking Irwell ward and believes with a full canvas campaign could win the seat in May.

The BNP was contesting Goodshaw and Whitewell for the first time and obtained a respectable 7.4% share across the two wards. In Whitewell the collapse of the Tory vote, from winning the seat in 2004 with 976 votes to its current 152, was the main talking point.

KEVIN BRYAN: An excellent 27.5% of the vote in Irwell ward.

BNP opposition to new mosque in Fareham

THERE was a day of action in Fareham in Hampshire on Saturday 1st September with nearly 40 members and supporters on duty.

Sky Television were there to record the day and some 4000 leaflets were delivered, 60 copies of Freedom and 5 copies of the Identity magazine sold.

"We also gave out around 400 leaflets to people who passed our town centre stall and 5 people wanted to join the Party there and then," reported event organiser Andy McBride.

"The theme of our day was to state our opposition to plans to build a mosque in the town. Three Labour Party supporters tried to disrupt the paper sale but they were given short shift which left them very red faced in front of the TV crew!

They were warned they would be arrested under the Public Order Act if they didn't move on. The police were terrific and kept a very low profile.

Work still to be done in York

THERE was an incredible turnout of 62% for the vital marginal seat of Heworth Without on York City Council.

"It wasn't a good ward for us but we wanted to put a marker down for future elections," agent Ian Dawson, told Freedom.

Questions and answers in Shrewsbury

SEVENTY members of the Shrewsbury Group of the British National Party were treated to some incisive speeches and informative discussion at their latest meeting.

Wolverhampton organiser Steve Haddon opened proceedings by highlighting of the discrimination faced daily by British people in the allocation of social housing and detailing how Labour has cynically used the immigrant vote to keep their grip on power.

Deputy Chairman Simon Darby, spoke on the great strides the BNP was making in Labour's heartland and updated the audience on three by-elections the Party was contesting on the same day in Worcester, Bedworth and Birmingham.

Rather than giving another speech, BNP chairman Nick Griffin, held his now popular question and answer session which give people the opportunity to find out more about the BNP stance on the topics that interested them most. It provided a thought provoking and most exhilarating hour.

Shrewsbury Organiser Karl Foulkes, closed the meeting and thanked all those who had attended and contributed to a collection that had raised over £200.

Day of action in BNP growth area

BRITISH National Party Councillors and members from Stoke spent Saturday 8th September in Alsager helping local BNP contact Stephen Davies, with his recruitment campaign in the Cheshire town.

"We distributed well over 2000 locally produced leaflets concentrating on the issues of the EU's erosion of British sovereignty and rising crime," BNP councillor for Weston & Meir North, Michael Coleman, told Freedom.

"We had an excellent response, many people giving us the thumbs up through their windows and even coming out to wish us well. We carried a huge Union flag around with us and the high number of tooting car horns and cheers was a great morale booster."

Alsager, which lies between Stoke and Crewe, and comes under Congleton Borough Council is a real growth area for the Party.

At the local elections in May, Stephen Davies polled 245 votes, attracting almost one in five of the votes in the Alsager East ward and coming a close third (just 22 votes behind the Conservatives) with 18% of the vote.

Liverpool BNP - a branch

The growth of Liverpool BNP is such that they have been upgraded to branch status.

This follows their excellent showing in the May elections, and their overall strength as a unit.

Liverpool has shot up in the Freedom sales league, fielded nine candidates in the city's local council elections in May 2007 and are on a financially sound footing.

They have regular, well attended meetings and a growing membership - all due to the hard work of Steve Greenhalgh and his team.

UKIP councillor switches to BNP

PATRICK Pattison, a Community Councillor for Llysfaen, in North Wales, has defected from UKIP and joined the British National Party.

Mr Pattison is a popular councillor because he has a no-nonsense approach to tearaways, bullies, and drug dealers that try to disrupt the local community. But the switch has upset Labour Welsh Secretary Peter Hain, and the Tories' Welsh leader Nick Bourne, who have both called on Patrick to resign.

Tories & UKIP trounced on Merseyside

ON Thursday 13th September the British National Party came third in the Warbreck ward by-election for Liverpool City Council beating the Tories, UKIP and the Greens.

Labour ran a massive campaign to overturn a 1,600 Liberal Democrat majority and capture the seat against all expectations. The close nature of the campaign hit the other parties.

A spokesman for Liverpool BNP reported on the Party's website forum that they were still pleased with the outcome.

"To finish ahead of the chasing pack was our goal and we achieved that. The result further confirms that the BNP is on the way up while the Tories and UKIP are virtually finished in the city."

It was a fact not lost on the Liverpool Echo which reported: "There was a further shock as the British National Party came third beating UKIP and the Tories."

A welcome in Wickford

THE British National Party were made very welcome in Wickford in south Essex at the beginning of September when Basildon organiser Len Heather, took his recruitment stall to the town.

Nearly every Saturday Len takes his display stand to various town centres as part of the "British National Party meets the people" campaign.

As always the response was friendly and encouraging with new members signing up, plenty of copies of Freedom sold and donations given.

Of course the local police were soon on the scene and after a flurry of telephone calls to their superiors gave permission for the activity to continue.

WITH YOUR HELP: Nick Griffin explains the importance of the BNP fighting a professional campaign for the 2009 European Elections.

Battle of Trafalgar painting auctioned at Cromwell Club dinner

SEPTEMBER saw yet another very successful gathering of North West Leicestershire's highly distinguished Cromwell Club.

Regular readers of Freedom will be familiar with this 'black tie' fundraising dinner club, and as is the custom the latest dinner was held in surroundings of 'baronial splendour'. Nick and Jackie Griffin were the guests of honour at this sell-out evening, welcomed by members and guests when they arrived in a tented bar on the terrace in front of the venue's magnificent gardens. Following a sumptuous dinner in the splendidly panelled dining room, the BNP chairman addressed the guests on the importance of the 2009 European Elections which could be a springboard to further growth for the BNP and access to funding, enabling the Party to channel its efforts into community based projects.

Showing his versatility, Nick then assumed the role of auctioneer, finding a new home for a redundant 'jam label person' and a magnificent painting of the battle of Trafalgar which he himself had autographed. The purpose of the evening was to generate funds for East Midlands' election campaigns and a significant amount was raised.

MEET THE BNP: Basildon organiser Len Heather, at his display stand.

North Somerset meeting

ON the evening of Sunday 2nd September, the first meeting of the new North Somerset group of the British National Party was held.

"It was a lively meeting with local people coming along to express their concern at the rising number of migrant workers taking local jobs in this part of the country," reported Mid-West Regional organiser Mike Howson.

"The meeting was a testimony to the growth of the BNP in the county with many people completely disillusioned with the old parties and looking for an alternative to tackle the problems sweeping the area".

AT THE READY: The Ludlow BNP team wait for the bus at the Park & Ride car park - Helen Foulkes, Paul Thomas, James Whittall & Karl Foulkes.

BNP stall kept busy at Ludlow Food Fair

by James Whittall

THE internationally famous Ludlow Food Fair was held in South Shropshire over the weekend of the 8th and 9th September with over 20,000 people converging on the small market town to sample the quality local produce available. The British National Party marked the occasion with a table-top stall in the town centre to distribute over 1000 leaflets as well as selling Freedom. Although Ludlow had been well leafleted over the past year, this was the first ever table-top paper sale and the BNP team was very well received. The usual anti-democratic rabble turned up but their insulting behaviour towards anyone who accepted one of our leaflets spectacularly backfired and resulted in an increase in interest and support. The town centre was so busy that people were requested to park on the outskirts of town and use the Park & Ride service, something the environmentally conscious Shropshire BNP team were delighted to comply with.

Aberdeen BNP boot sale

THERE was a joint papersale and car-boot stall managed by Aberdeen and Moray & Gordon BNP last month at Inverurie just outside Aberdeen. Everyone soon knew where the BNP were after a 'screamer' helped attract a huge crowd around the stall.

"We carried on with our boot and paper-sale and handed out leaflets. As a result of people seeing the British National Party face-to-face we received six membership enquiries and raised nearly £100," Aberdeen organiser Steven Thompson, told Freedom.

Why Should Immigrants Have The Monopoly on Housing?

Why is it so many homes seem to go to asylum seekers or those from ethnic minority backgrounds?
Why is it that when young British couples go for a home they're put to the back of the list?
Why is it that the children of British families have to share bedrooms when new arrivals get homes with more space?

BNP launches its GLA and London Mayor campaign with a clean-up in Barking

BRITISH National Party chairman Nick Griffin, helped launch the Party's GLA and London Mayor election campaign with a 3-day tour across the capital speaking to packed meetings.

It started with a meeting in Dagenham which was fitting as the BNP candidate for London Mayor is Richard Barnbrook, the leader of the BNP group of 12 councillors, the official opposition, on Barking & Dagenham Council.

All three meetings followed the same pattern with London organiser Nick Eriksen, kicking off proceedings by highlighting how immigration had impacted on various aspects of London life, followed by a rallying call from Richard Barnbrook.

In his speech Nick Griffin recalled the London of his childhood, pointing out how life has changed – and not for the better. The main focus of his address however was on the importance of the London elections in 2008.

"The BNP can win one, or even two seats on the London Assembly, but only through the hard work and dedication of all our London members," he told the audience.

Funding the necessary deposits and finding the printing and campaign costs is all important so a Dutch Auctions was held at each meeting.

The Dagenham collection received a real boost when Steve Johnson, a dedicated member and local election candidate presented Nick Griffin with a cheque for £5,315 – every penny raised from saving small change over the last five years.

The Dagenham collection then received a further cheque for £1,000 from another very generous member, and continued until a total of £8,000 had been collected.

The following day Nick Griffin, Richard Barnbrook and a team of activists conducted a clean-up in Barking.

Rubbish was collected, graffiti painted over and another part of London improved for all the decent local residents. How many other party leaders would get their hands dirty trying to improve our neighbourhoods?

The following night an excellent meeting was held in Greenwich where it was standing room only. The BNP has grown incredibly in the last few years, and those who have come from other parties always express surprise at the number of members we have, their dedication and how they are quite different to the media stereotype.

The BNP attracts members from all walks of life, young and old, and an increasing number of women. At all the meetings people in suits and ties mingled happily with those in T-shirts and jeans, and the only skinheads in evidence were those who had become so through advancing years! The meeting concluded with another excellent collection, this time of just over £2,000.

The final meeting was in Cheam, organised by the Merton and Wandsworth group which is London's fastest growing BNP unit. Instead of the usual private function room the organisers had taken over the whole bar! The majority of those attending were new members, signed up in the past few weeks.

The final collection raised just over £1,800, meaning that Nick Griffin's London tour had raised a total of almost £12,000 in just three days! What a great start to our London elections campaigns.
